FUND COMMENTARY

It was a strong quarter for global equity markets, driven by the easing of both US monetary policy and trade tensions. Additionally, the accelerated investment cycle in cloud capital expenditure continues, fuelled by robust AI-related demand signals from the hyperscalers' (Microsoft, Amazon, Google and Oracle) enterprise clients. This combination of factors drove a global rally in technology stocks, propelling the tech-heavy S&P 500 to new all-time highs, while the rally in the Chinese equity market was extended, also driven by the strength of its own domestic tech sector.

The portfolio underperformed its reference index during the period, largely due to its underweight exposure to US equities and to a lesser extent sector allocation.

The top contributors to performance included TSMC, Alphabet and EssilorLuxottica. TSMC reached new all-time highs, buoyed by strong results and peer announcements that confirmed a robust investment cycle in datacentre capex. Alphabet rallied following a favourable decision in its anti-trust case challenging its dominance in online advertising and after posting strong quarterly earnings. The results showcased continued strength in its AI infrastructure investments across both its core search and cloud divisions. EssilorLuxottica benefited from strong momentum of recent product launches, especially in its smart eyewear range. The company also posted robust organic growth in the second quarter, suggesting an acceleration into the end of the year.

Detractors to portfolio performance included Intuit, Verisk and Alcon. Intuit delivered strong fiscal fourth-quarter results, but its full-year guidance for fiscal year 2026 disappointed investors. We do however note that the company's management has a history of issuing conservative forecasts. Verisk released quarterly earnings above market expectations, but the stock reacted negatively to the announcement of its acquisition of AccuLynx, a business management and CRM platform tailored for roofing contracts, its largest acquisition in a decade. Alcon delivered a disappointing set of results, missing market expectations amid a weak demand environment and intensifying competitive pressures across its intraocular lens segment. Consequently, the company downgraded its full-year guidance.

We made a few portfolio moves in the quarter. We reduced our position in ASML due to quality and growth concerns, as well as in Eli Lilly and Alcon on valuation grounds. We sold our holdings in Accenture and Shin-Etsu on growth concerns. The proceeds were used to add to our positions in Amazon and initiate seed positions in Hermès, SAP, American Express, Nvidia and Oracle.

Looking ahead, however, the environment remains highly uncertain. The recent easing in global trade tensions could prove fragile, while the future path for interest rates is still a subject of intense debate amid broader macroeconomic ambiguity. Despite these potential headwinds, powerful secular themes such as AI continue to captivate investor attention. This creates a challenging backdrop where strong thematic momentum coexists with continued macro uncertainty, demanding a highly selective approach.

Within this market outlook, our disciplined philosophy remains unchanged. As this AI-driven investment cycle continues, our focus is firmly on identifying the durable winners: high-quality companies with clear earnings visibility that are positioned to compound growth on a sustainable basis. This is proving effective, as the portfolio remains firmly on track to deliver full-year earnings growth notably above that of the broader index.
