Monthly Comment

July marked a significant shift in market sentiment, although this was not visible on the surface with the Stoxx Europe 600 closing up +1.25% and the Stoxx Europe Small 200 up +4.62%. The Momentum factor faced a massive reversal, driven by profit-taking on Artificial Intelligence-driven companies and their beneficiaries, which underperformed the so-called "losers" of the past 12 months. From a sector perspective, semiconductors drove most of the negative performance, while "people-intensive business models" recovered. Moreover, despite renewed deterioration in the US-Iran conflict over the month, the European earnings season was marked by particularly positive Q2 releases, as well as upgrades to 2026 outlooks from many companies. Eventually, bid activity accelerated across the European Small & Mid-Cap universe, with transactions occurring at substantial premiums, highlighting the asset class's attractive valuation discount.

In this context, ELEVA Leaders Small & Mid Cap Europe underperformed in July, given its correlation with the Momentum factor. The main detractor from performance was the selection effect with BESI, ASM International or Inficon among the most negative contributors, only partially offset by positive contributions of Acerinox, Euronext, and Amundi.

While the high volatility witnessed in July was negative for our strategy, it nevertheless demonstrated that a broadening trend was taking place, positively impacting assets that had fallen out of favor, especially within the Small & Mid-cap space. We seized the opportunity to revisit business models that should ultimately emerge strengthened by the ongoing shift in market focus.
