Investment Manager Commentary

Market Development

The first month of the year saw a continuation of the themes that characterised the last quarter of 2025: sustained global economic growth supported by expansionary fiscal measures, in a context of easing inflationary pressures. In the USA, the data published after the gap created by the public administration shutdown reinforced this view. Over the month, government yield curves showed a slight flattening due to reduced expectations for Fed rate cuts later in the year. The dollar continued its weakening trend against the main G10 and emerging market currencies. As regards emerging market bond indices, there was a slight narrowing of spreads (+9 basis points for the JP Morgan EMBIG index and +15bps for the JP Morgan CEMBI index), which prevented hard currency indices from generating positive results: the JP Morgan EMBIG index gained 0.56% and the corporate index (JP Morgan CEMBI Broad) gained 0.72%. Also in January, the performance of the High Yield component outperformed that of Investment Grade, which was down 0.55%. The JP Morgan GBI-EM local currency debt index performed very well (2.18%), as did the JP Morgan ELMH+ index, which also gained 148bps.

Performance and Investment Choices

In the Fund, the liquidity component increased to 2%. The spread duration has increased beyond 3 years. The Fund put in a positive performance in January. All major countries contributed to the result, with standout performances from High Yield credits in Argentina, Ghana and Ukraine.

Outlook and Investment Strategy

Interest rates and low market volatility remain key factors at this stage, especially in view of the Fed's expected continued expansionary monetary policy approach. The weakness of the US dollar, sentiment, and consequently flows represented a significant source of support to the market, despite the uncertainty posed by geopolitical risks. Technical factors such as positioning and expected net funding until the end of the year should continue to support the asset class.
